The 2016 Leadership Conference, “Interprofessional Practice: Co-creating Collaborative Environments,” features critical conversations about the challenges and rewards of leading collaborative practices with both faculty colleagues and colleagues in the practice environment. Under the aegis of the NLN Center for Transformational Leadership, and the NLN | Chamberlain Center for the Advancement of the Science of Nursing Education, the conference will address the following objectives:

Identify how collaborative leadership creates a positive environment for interprofessional education.

Explore strategies to:
- Encourage and support collaborative behavior.
- Implement situational decision-making.
- Value diverse thinking to foster collaborative practice.
- Value diverse thinking to foster collaborative practice.

Engage in courageous dialogues to reflect and consider ways to co-create a positive organizational culture that promotes collaborative practice.

Leading through collaboration changes the culture of work environments; groups support individuals to take up their authority to lead, depending on the situation. This approach is the foundation for collaborative practice, the goal of interprofessional education.
